NEW QUESTION: 1

Click the Exhibit button and view a network diagram and three switch configurations.

A company is replacing two Cisco switches at the distribution layer with two HP E6200 y1 Series switches. You have begun the migration by connecting one of the new HP E-Series switches to the existing network in parallel. The first exhibit displays the network topology at this point in the migration. The Cisco distribution switch is running EIGRP and HSRP. The Cisco core switch runs EIGRP and OSPF, and the HP E-Series switch runs OSPF and VRRP. The edge switches and endpoints in VLANs 1, 2, 10, and 20 use 10.1.X.254 as their default gateway address (X being their VLAN ID). You will now disable VLAN 10 on the Cisco distribution switch and enable VRRP on VLAN 10 on the HP E-Series switch. But to avoid connectivity issues for some endpoints, you need to change your configuration first. What are two ways you can configure the distribution switches? (Select two.)

- A. Change the virtual IP address on the E-Series switch to a different address such as 10.1.10.253/24.
- B. Configure a default route to 10.1.1.1/24 on the HP E-Series switch.
- C. Migrate the Cisco switches to OSPF only and enable OSPF on VLANs 1, 2, 20, and 111 on the Cisco distribution switch.
- D. Change the virtual 10 IP address on the Cisco distribution switch to a different address such as 10.1.10.253/24 before disabling the interface.
- E. Configure a default route on the Cisco distribution switch to a routing switch at the core.
