B. To highlight errors in the program interfaces with files
C. To enable comprehensive unit and system testing
D. To determine if the system is cost-effective
Answer: A
Explanation:
Explanation/Reference:
Explanation:
The purpose of parallel testing is to ensure that the implementation of a new system will meet user requirements. Parallel testing may show that the old system is, in fact, better than the new system, but this is not the primary reason. Unit and system testing are completed before parallel testing. Program interfaces with files are tested for errors during system testing.
