NEW QUESTION: 1

The water level is the percentage of the used space in the node pool as a percentage of the total storage space, including the high water level and the read-only water level.

Huawei OceanStor 9000 limits the storage and migration of files through the water threshold. The following descriptions, which are wrong?

A. When the used space of the node pool reaches the read-only water level and the Spillover is selected, the node pool prohibits writing data while continuing to write data to any other node pool or specified node pool.

B. When the used space of the node pool reaches the read-only water level and the Spillover is not selected, the node pool prohibits writing data and does not write data to other node pools.

C. When the used space of the node pool reaches the high water level, the system reports an insufficient capacity alarm. The alarm recovery threshold defaults to 5% lower than the water level line. That is, when the used space is restored to less than 80%, the capacity shortage alarm is restored. The alarm threshold and alarm recovery threshold can be manually modified.

D. When the used space of the node pool reaches the read-only water level, the system reports a read-only alarm. The alarm recovery threshold defaults to 10% lower than the water mark, and the read-only alarm is restored.

Answer: D

D. AMI, 'ç™»éÉ²ã•™ã, <

Answer: C

Explanation:

When the user has launched an EC2 instance from an instance store backed AMI, it will need to follow certain steps, such as "Bundling the root volume", "Uploading the bundled volume" and "Register the AMI". Once the AMI is created the user can setup the launch permission. However, it is not required to setup during the launch.
