NEW QUESTION: 2

Which statements are true about Parallel Concurrent Processing?
(Choose all that apply.)

- A. Each node operates independently of other nodes except when sharing resources.
- B. Processes could continue running on available nodes even when one or more nodes fail.
- C. Processes integrate with platform-specific batch queue and load-balancing systems to maximize concurrent processing performance on a particular platform.
- D. One or more managers could be run on one or more nodes.
- E. Each node operates depending on other nodes except when sharing resources.
- F. Managers could be administered only from the master node.

Answer: A, B, C, D

Explanation:

A: With parallel concurrent processing, one or more concurrent managers run on one or more nodes in a multi-node environment. You decide where concurrent managers run when configuring your system.

C (not E): Each node operates independently of other nodes, except when sharing a resource such as a disk.

D: Fault Tolerance--the ability to continue running concurrent processes on available nodes even when one or more nodes fails.

F: Adaptability--the ability to integrate with platform-specific batch queue and load-balancing systems to maximize concurrent processing performance on a particular platform.

Note: Parallel concurrent processing runs in multi-node environments, such as cluster, massively parallel, and homogeneous networked environments. In these environments, each node consists of one or more processors (CPUs) and their associated memory. Each node has its own memory that is not shared with other nodes.

Parallel concurrent processing allows you to distribute concurrent managers across multiple nodes in a cluster, massively parallel, or homogeneous networked environment. Instead of operating concurrent processing on a single node while other nodes are idle, you can spread concurrent processing across all available nodes, fully utilizing hardware resources.

Benefits of Parallel Concurrent Processing

Parallel concurrent processing provides Oracle Applications users with the following benefits:

*High performance--the ability to run concurrent processes on multiple nodes to improve concurrent processing throughput.

*Fault Tolerance--the ability to continue running concurrent processes on available nodes even when one or more nodes fails.

*Adaptability--the ability to integrate with platform-specific batch queue and load-balancing systems to maximize concurrent processing performance on a particular platform.

*Single Point of Control--the ability to administer concurrent managers running on multiple nodes from any node in a cluster (not B), massively parallel, or homogeneous networked environment.
