NEW QUESTION: 1
An organization has been providing web services within their private cloud. The web services, deployed through a service catalog, depend on a database resource in the private cloud. The organization decided to make these web services availability globally by using a public cloud provider. However, once of the web services were deployed into the public cloud, users started complaining about poor performance. Which solution would most likely improve performance of the web services.
A. Re-architect the web-service to be deployed as a month coupled
B. Re-architect the web-service to be loosely coupled with the database
C. Balance the load globally across multiple instances of the web service.

D. Balance the load globally across multiple instances of the database
Answer: C

If an investor searches for patterns in security returns by examining various techniques applied to a set of data, this is known as:
A. Technical analysis.
B. Data mining.
C. Fundamental analysis.
D. Random-walk theory.
Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 3
Assuming there are no custom properties defined in current plugin-cfg.xml file, what should be done before running the GenPluginCfg command?
A. Delete the global plugin-cfg.xml in the <profile_root>/config/cells directory.
B. Use either the Integrated Solutions Console or the ConfigurewebServerDefinition.jacl script to create a web server definition.
C. Delete the current plugin-cfg.xml in the <profile_root>/config/cells directory.
D. Clear the Enable automated web server configuration processing option in the web server plugin configuration service.
Answer: C
Explanation:
Delete the plugin-cfg.xml file in the profile_root/config/cells directory before you use the GenPluginCfg command. Otherwise, configuration changes do not persist to the plugin-cfg.xml file. However, do not delete the plugin-cfg.xml file if you have custom properties that you previously set in it that you need to persist.
Note: You can update the global plugin-cfg.xml file using the administrative console or running the GenPluginCfg command for all of the clusters in a cell. However, you must delete the config/cells/plugin-cfg.xml file before you update the global plugin-cfg.xml file. If you do not delete the config/cells/plugin-cfg.xml file, only the new properties and their values are added to the global plugin-cfg.xml file. Any updates to existing plug-in property values are not added to the global plugin-cfg.xml file.
