NEW QUESTION: 2 Which of the following networking devices allows the connection of two or more homogeneous LANs in a simple way where they forward the traffic based on the MAC address? A. Bridges B. Routers C. Gateways D. Firewalls Answer: A Explanation:

Bridges are simple, protocol-dependent networking devices that are used to connect two or more homogeneous LANs to form an extended LAN. A bridge does not change the contents of the frame being transmitted but acts as a relay. A gateway is designed to reduce the problems of interfacing any combination of local networks that employ different level protocols or local and long-haul networks. A router connects two networks or network segments and may use IP to route messages. Firewalls are methods of protecting a network against security threats from other systems or networks by centralizing and controlling access to the protected network segment.
