NEW QUESTION: 1Which two mechanisms address threats of elevating user privileges in the application access domain?A. User authentication and Information Rights Management (IRM)B. Access control to storage objects and auditingC. Access control to storage objects and Access Control Lists (ACLs)D.

Authentication and authorizationAnswer: D
Explanation:Securing the Application Access DomainAccess control services regulate user and host access to data. These services mitigate the threats of spoofing user identity and elevating their privileges. Both these threats affect data integrity and confidentiality. Access control mechanisms used in application access domain are user and host authentication (technical control) and authorization (administrative control). These mechanisms may lie outside the boundaries of the storage network and require various systems to interconnect with other enterprise identity management and authentication systems. NAS devices support the creation of access control lists that regulates user access to specific files. The Enterprise Content Management application enforces access to data by using Information Rights Management (IRM) that specifies which users have what rights to a document.EMC E10-001 Student Resource Guide.
