corresponds to an average annual expected loss of 0.01% of objects. For example, if you store 10,000 objects using the RRS option, you can, on average, expect to incur an annual loss of a single object per year (0.01% of 10,000 objects).

Note:

This annual loss represents an expected average and does not guarantee the loss of less than 0.01% of objects in a given year.

Reduced redundancy storage stores objects on multiple devices across multiple facilities, providing 400 times the durability of a typical disk drive, but it does not replicate objects as many times as Amazon S3 standard storage. In addition, reduced redundancy storage is designed to sustain the loss of data in a single facility.

If an object in reduced redundancy storage has been lost, Amazon S3 will return a 405 error on requests made to that object. Amazon S3 also offers notifications for reduced redundancy storage object loss: you can configure your bucket so that when Amazon S3 detects the loss of an RRS object, a notification will be sent through Amazon Simple Notification Service (Amazon SNS). You can then replace the lost object. To enable notifications, you can use the Amazon S3 console to set the Notifications property of your bucket.

NEW QUESTION: 3

Refer to the exhibit.

A network administrator is upgrading the operating system on an HP Comware switch. When copying the new image from a TFTP server to the flash of the switch, the process fails because there is not enough flash to store the new operating system. The new operating system is 3.2MB in size. The administrator then executes the commands shown in the exhibit above.

Which action should the administrator perform to solve this problem?

- A. Execute the `reset recycle-bin` command, and perform the TFTP transfer again.
- B. Execute the `clear flash` command, and perform the TFTP transfer again.
- C. Execute the `delete old.app` command, and perform the TFTP transfer again.
- D. Reformat flash, and perform the TFTP transfer again.

Answer: D
